There is a continuing need for biosensors that are capable of measuring substances in very small amounts in very short periods of time. For example, monitoring the glucose concentration in a blood sample requires making a small blood sample measurement every five minutes. In another example, monitoring the glucose concentration in a blood sample requires making a small blood sample measurement every minute. Miniaturization has greatly enhanced the number and size of bioactive compounds that can be characterized. However, miniaturization typically results in a decrease in the measurement accuracy of biosensors. There is a continuing need for improvements in biosensors that address these issues and enable applications that are not feasible with current 3e33713323
