The following list includes the tools and techniques typically used in a one- or two-person studio: Layer tools Pen tools Gradients Levels Color management Plug-ins Plug-in automation Manipulation and selection tools Image analysis Raster graphics tools Filters Camera Raw Warp, Distort, and other drawing tools A professional studio can produce significantly better work for a given set of time and resources because multiple people share the responsibility and involvement in a project. In addition, a studio can have multiple tools, so if someone else is doing something that you want to avoid, you can collaborate on the change instead of being stuck with the work you created. You can use online resources and tutorials as well to get up to speed faster on the basics in this book. For example, you can read Chapter 9 to learn the basics of color-correction tools and understand why color correction is important and the techniques used to create color adjustments. You can also find a collection of online articles in the Pro Tricks and Tips section at www.digital-photography-school.com for you to peruse. You can also see the tutorials in the Appendix. All the Photoshop tutorials in the book include a Part Two with many tutorial projects that would be difficult to construct for a single project. This approach is followed by experienced Photoshop artists to make it easier for beginning artists to quickly create more complex projects. ##

Photoshop Workshops Some professional studios offer _Photoshop workshops_ for schools, businesses, and individual customers. They typically offer either ongoing (as in, once a month) or one-day workshops. They can range in cost from a few hundred dollars for a one-day workshop to a few thousand dollars for an ongoing workshop. Typically, in-person workshops are better than online (VTC) workshops (see the following section). You can find more information on workshops by checking out the workshops page on Photoshop.com. ##

Online Tutorials The Internet has become the dominant medium of learning, and it's no surprise that it's also the place to go for Photoshop tutorials. While traditional _tutorials_ are usually based on a single project and require time and effort to create, the advantage of online resources is that you can work on individual tasks quickly without worrying about them. You can skip ahead to apply the skills to other projects, and you can download that it is the power company in the area that is putting on special rates for internet so that everyone has it, and also the DSLAM(access point) on the outside of your house that is providing the service and is the box that is connecting to the internet. RATEPAYER might be the rate your internet provider gives you for it, even though it's just another internet provider that the phone company has decided to make available to you in that area, maybe they want the service to be that much cheaper. If we're talking to the box outside your house (in addition to the box at your home), it's probably the phone company's box as well...though I'd like to know which one. at home: yes- they usually provide it (or someone provides it for them) an outside box: likely a phone company box but not crosecrans@enquirer.com In this week's "Insider," the Reds pitching staff said it has discovered a "communication gap" between itself and manager Bryan Price. In the process, Price is being linked to a possible trade, although the manager said no decision has been made. The Reds are hoping to trade Alfredo Simon, who threw seven shutout innings against the Pirates last night, to clear up bullpen issues. "We've been looking at who we want to put in the bullpen and the decision is still up in the air,” Price said. “I’m not going to give you any inside information on that. We’ve got a communication gap.” Simon had been set to be the primary set-up man to Zach Duke, who is coming off of a no-hitter at Colorado, but the Reds are experiencing injury issues with those two closers. Anthony DeSclafani and Raisel Iglesias are dealing with shoulder soreness and Brandon Finnegan is dealing with a hamstring injury. Considering the Reds’ current record, bullpen performance is now a bigger issue than team performance on the field. Reds struggle to score runs In a series of 12 “Tom from Cincinnati” question-and-answer sessions, “Insider” writer Jay Dienst asked general manager Dick Williams about how to address the Reds’ offense issues. After batting .236, there's little doubt the Reds are underachieving. But Williams noted that increasing the offense has been a priority of general manager Dick Williams, Jr. and his father. In a season in which the Reds have now had a winning record in four of the last five seasons, the team has scored more than 3.0 runs per game in 12 of the last 15 games and 10 of the last 12 games. "We're not trying to score the same run per game," Williams said. "We're looking to be more balanced in our approach." Two of the Reds' main issues, strikeouts and on-base percentage, are rising. The team had been trying to address that by emphasizing getting runners on base and runners in scoring position. The Reds don't feel they
